Two cemetery monuments recall 1860s' Camp Harrison — Civil War prison camp

Two cemetery monuments endure as reminders of the time during the Civil War when Terre Haute hosted Camp Harrison, a rebel prison.

The stockade was housed between February and May 1862 in the vacant Henry Williams' pork packing house, situated in what is now Fairbanks Park.

One of the monuments is the impressive obelisk in Confederate Circle at Woodlawn Cemetery, which commemorates the deaths of as many as 13 captives during their Terre Haute habitation. It has been discussed in earlier columns.

The other memorial is the gravestone of Col. Bernard F. Mullen, commander of the Indiana regiment dispatched to Camp Harrison on Feb. 24, 1862, to guard 279 prisoners from Tennessee and Alabama cavalries who had been captured at Fort Donelson.

Eventually, more than 800 men were imprisoned at the Terre Haute camp before being transported to Camp Morton in Indianapolis.

Col. Mullen, who became a Terre Haute resident after the war, is interred at St. Joseph's Catholic Cemetery, which adjoins Woodlawn.

A native of Manayunk, Pa., then a suburb of Philadelphia but now a part of the city, Mullen relocated to Ripley County, Indiana, as a teenager. His older brother Alexander became a physician and, in 1845, Bernard enrolled at Versailles Medical Academy, 11 miles south of his hometown of Napoleon, Ind., to seek instruction. His brother, later a prominent St. Louis doctor, was a member of the faculty.

While diligently pursuing a medical education, Bernard and two classmates — Jonathan Gordon and John Glass — decided they could advance their knowledge by doing an autopsy of a recently deceased person. Plans were hatched to illegally exhumate a body from a Versailles cemetery.

The scheme was discovered and a posse surrounded the group during the dig. Mullen and Gordon escaped on horseback but Glass, in a desperate effort to escape, leaped off a 175-foot high cliff overlooking the Laughery River. Believing Glass had been killed in the fall, the vigilantes gave up the chase. As it turned out, Glass miraculously fell on branches of a tall elm and survived with a few broken bones, cuts and bruises.

To avoid prosecution for attempted grave-robbing, Mullen abandoned medical school and volunteered for service in the 3rd Indiana Volunteers during the Mexican War. From June 26, 1846 until Oct. 31, 1846, he was a steward. Then, he was assigned to Col. George W. Morgan's 2nd Ohio Volunteers as an assistant surgeon.

In February 1847, he was appointed surgeon at the General Hospital in Jalapa, Mexico, and was honorably discharged April 20, 1847, one of the youngest men to serve as an American surgeon in the Mexican War.

Returning to Indiana, Dr. Mullen settled in Madison and, on April 9, 1849, married Mary F. Mancourt. They eventually had four sons and a daughter. In 1853, he took his family back to Napoleon, opened an office and joined the National Rifles, a Ripley County militia unit, attaining the rank of colonel.

In November 1861, Indiana Gov. Oliver Morton authorized Mullen to form the 61st Indiana Regiment, the second Irish regiment mustered in Indiana. Until the day Adjutant Gen. Laz Noble ordered his regiment to guard the rebel prisoners at Terre Haute, Mullen was engaged in recruiting troops with limited success.

On May 22, 1862, the 61st Indiana was merged into the 35th Indiana Regiment, the first Irish regiment, under Col. John C. Walker. Dr. Mullen was commissioned lieutenant colonel and the unit was dispatched to Shelbyville, Tenn.

Instant acrimony emerged between Mullen and Col. Walker, who tried to block Mullen from assuming command. In July 1862, Mullen was arrested for incompetency. After an evidentiary hearing, Mullen was exonerated, but Col. Walker was charged with unmilitary conduct, forcing him to resign. On Aug. 7, 1862, Lt. Col. Mullen was commissioned commanding colonel of the 35th Indiana, initially attached to Gen. Mahlon Manson's Division of the Army of the Cumberland.

Mullen's regiment participated admirably in skirmishes at McMinnville, Franklin, Perryville, Crab Orchard, Dobbin's Ferry and Stone River. At Dobbin's Ferry, Lt. Bernard R. Mullen, the son of Dr. Alexander Mullen, was killed. At Stone River and at Murfreesboro, Col. Mullen was wounded and contracted a serious lung ailment, probably tuberculosis, but continued in the field.

In February 1863, he received a 20-day leave but, while recovering in Madison, suffered a serious relapse. By May, he could conduct regimental affairs by mail and visited several Indiana cities, including Terre Haute, at Gov. Morton's request, to recruit troops.

On June 12, 1863, in anticipation of a possible invasion into Indiana by Confederate Col. John Hunt Morgan, Gov. Morton named Mullen as commandant of the Army post at Madison. At Mullen's invitation, about 900 members of the Indiana State Militia under Col. Samuel B. Serling arrived to protect Madison in early July.

Morgan's Raiders entered Corydon on July 8 and defeated Union forces guarding that city in one day. Mullen placed Madison under martial law, dispatched troops into the hills surrounding the community and felled trees to block access roads. A small force feinted attack on Madison while Morgan's main army successfully attacked Versailles.

Feted many times for his leadership during the war, Col. Mullen relocated to Terre Haute in early 1871. Though never fully recovered from lung ailments, he practiced medicine and became active in the Democratic Party. He also was recognized for his artistic bent as an author, poet, composer and master of the piano, violin and cornet.

In January 1879, Dr. Mullen was selected by a state party caucus as Democratic candidate for State Librarian. However, he died on Feb. 3, 1879, while campaigning in a room at the Occidental Hotel in Indianapolis. A special railroad car transported his body to Terre Haute for viewing and services at the Mullen residence at 1530 Liberty Ave. and burial.

The Mullen family stayed in Terre Haute. Son Alexander Mullen later was elected city clerk.

Dear Mrs Clark: —

My father
Wm H. Lutz was born in 1863 in the 600 block on Harding Ave. I was born in 1894 in the 500 block on Harding.

My father told me that confederate prisoners had been confined in a building at about the foot of Crawford street on the west side of 1st street. as much as I can remember this building was torn down when I was about 10 years old (1904)

The building was a one story building and had no windows on the 1st street side. There may have been some but I can not remember it that way. Back of it toward the river was the ruins of the old distillery. I feel sure that he knew what he was talking about for he had a meat Market at Harding + Wilson and my Grandfather Fuhr had a grocery store. Some of the old timers must of told him this.

This building was about 200 ft square and one story. Of 800 prisoners were quartered in T.H. it is very likely more than one place of confinement was in use. I can remember this building quite well.

sincerely yours.

Dear Mrs. Clark. -

This is my second letter

There is an 1874

you can see it.

I don't get your

the Farringtons addition.
The map shows Farringtons is shown 2 Packing houses

I think I said in my

14 CONFEDERATES WERE BURIED HERE

Once During Civil War Four Hundred of Lee's Soldiers Were Held Captive Here.

Very few of the younger generation of Terre Haute know that at one time during the civil war there was a confederate prison and confederate hospital here. Yet this and more is true. Besides a confederate prison and hospital there were two union army hospitals and hundreds of union soldiers, recruited in Terre Haute, camped here temporarily.

Circumstances connected with those days were one time related by the veteran undertaker, the late Isaac Ball. "Just after the battle of Fort Donaldson," he said, "four hundred confederate soldiers were brought here and placed in an old building near where the Merchants' distillery later stood, and which had been used as a pork packing establishment by James Farrington, (father of the late George E. Farrington.) The prison was between the river bank and First street and just across the street stood a little brick building, used as a hospital.

"Here the sick rebels were cared for, and during the months they were there I was called to bury 14 of them. The commander told me to bury them the same as I would a county pauper, and I did so, but when I presented my bill at Indianapolis a few months later, the authorities laughed at me, because it was so high. I had placed each man in a single casket and buried them in single graves at Woodlawn cemetery, while at Indianapolis, where many died, they had buried them in the roughest kind of boxes and in place of putting them away in single graves, they dug trenches and buried ten or fifteen at a time. The trenches would be dug by rebel prisoners and the total expense would amount to only about $2.50 each, while I had to pay a sexton, $2.50 for every grave dug.

Never Compensated.

"I pushed my claim and believe I would have gotten my money had Governor Oliver P. Morton lived, but on his death I dropped my claim and never received a penny for the burials. Later the rebel prisoners were removed to Indianapolis. Of the 14 men I buried at Woodlawn, 13 still lie there, their graves being unmarked and unwept."

Subsequently to Mr. Ball's story a monument was erected to the memory of the men he buried. It was in the southwest part of the cemetery in the region where he buried the dead soldiers. A bronze marker on one side of it gave the names and regiments of the men it commemorated, but this marker later was torn from its fastenings and never recovered, nor has it been replaced.

Mr. Ball continued his story with a description of the removal of one body from Woodlawn. "One man named Zollecoffer, had wealthy relatives in Tennessee, and a brother came for the body. He had me go to the cemetery with him and on the road there began to berate me the north. I stopped my horse and told him that if he didn't stop talking in such a manner I would put him out. He sobered up and we continued to the cemetery where the sexton, H. D. Milons, had begun to uncover the grave.

"Here the southerner again began his abuse and we warned him not to utter another word against the north or the union or we would fill the grave and not permit him to take the body away. With this he stopped and next day called on me to apologize for his actions and words, which he said were partly due to liquor. The other 13 graves are as I left them years ago.

"Later during the war the government established two union hospitals here, one at the corner of First street and Wabash avenue and the other at Second and Wabash avenue (where Young's Indois Hotel now is.) They both were fitted up for the care of a large number of sick and injured and Drs. Mann and Rice, who were in charge, were kept busy for months. Of the hundreds who were cared for in them only 12 or 13 died, buried them at Woodlawn and their graves now are marked with G. A. R. markers."

1890 fire that destroyed Early Pork House ends era

There have been bigger and more sensational fires in Terre Haute but few were more symbolic than the May 28, 1890 blaze that destroyed Early Pork House on the east side of Water Street, between Canal and Sycamore streets.

At 10:40 a.m., Elmer Goddard, a switchman for the Terre Haute & Indianapolis (or Vandalia) Railroad, noticed a fire in the southeast corner of one of two warehouses in the pork house complex south of Sycamore Street. He triggered an alarm.

By the time the fire department arrived the blaze was burning furiously.

Winds carried the flames north, setting fire to a brick tenement house at the corner of Water and Canal streets. The building, known as the Drover Hotel during the Wabash and Erie Canal era, housed six families.

George Pittman, one of the occupants, leased the building from the Early family and sublet units to George Wilson and his family, the Jerome Grim family, William Skaggs and his family, Dave Kennedy and his family and 77-year old Margaret Carr, mother of recently deceased newspaper publisher Perry S. Westfall.

Mrs. Carr was sick and needed assistance to be removed from the burning building. Kennedy was severely burned on his hands, arms and neck trying to remove valuables from the inferno.

As firefighters frantically fought the tenement house fire, flames jumped across the railroad tracks to the brick pork packing house. The northeast corner of the pork house caught fire and the flames spread quickly. Five hose companies devoted all of their attention to the building, saturated with decades of grease and lard.

Firefighters kept busy running from place-to-place as flames previously believed to be extinguished broke out again.

HISTORICAL PERSPECTIVE

McCORMICK

Shortly after noon, the north wall of the tenement house collapsed.

By 2 p.m., the fire had run its course. The two frame warehouse buildings were totally destroyed.

The brick outside walls of the pork house remained standing but the interior was completely burned.

The two remaining walls of the tenement house were pulled down as they were considered dangerous.

The demise of Early Pork House 120 years ago was a milestone, ending an era commencing in 1824 when pork packing was the community's leading industry.

Benjamin Ives Gilman of Cincinnati is credited with establishing the first local pork packing business in a small brick structure at the northeast corner of First and Mulberry streets.

Gilman did not live in Terre Haute long, selling his business to Joseph Miller, a native of Oswego, N.Y., in 1825 or 1826.

Miller owned the business by himself for several years before uniting in a partnership with Jacob Drennan Early, a native of Flemingsburg, Ky., in 1836.

Pork and lard were shipped by flatboat to New Orleans.

Like many other pork merchants, Miller traveled to southern ports by stagecoach and steamboat to monitor the sale of his goods.

Over the years, the Gilman-Miller-Early packing house was owned successively by John L. Humaston, Lucius Ryce and James Ross and William Reiman & Co.

John F. and William S. Cruft operated a pork house on Water Street, north of Wabash Avenue, for a few years in the 1830s. They sold the business to John Burson, who had been packing in a cheap frame structure south of Wabash.

Alexander McCune managed Burson's Pork House for a few years while Daniel Johnson and Ralph Wilson opened a slaughterhouse in a frame house on the north side of Wabash near the river.

Jacob D. Early, after associating with Joseph Miller for about five years, opened a pork house of his own in a cooper shop owned by George Hamer on the south side of Mulberry at First Street.

That building was used as a theater during the early 1840s and, finally, was converted permanently to that use.

Chauncey B. Miller built a slaughter house in 1841 at the corner of Canal and Water streets and used it until 1845, when he rented it to Jacob Early. Early purchased the building in 1848 and built a much larger pork house at the site in the same year.

In 1842, John Boudinot, James Farrington and Israel Williams, brother-in-law of Chauncey Rose, built a pork house in the area now known as Fairbanks Park. The firm was known as John Boudinot & Co. It succeeded by Henry D. Williams & Co., which built a much larger facility at the site in 1848.

Boudinot and Levi G. Warren helped Samuel Paddock build a pork house on the south side of Wabash in 1849 while George R. Wilson and William B. Warren erected a slaughterhouse near the river between Tyler Street (now Tippecanoe Street) and the Alton & Terre Haute Railroad bridge in 1850.

The McKeen family - particularly Benjamin McKeen - associated with Paddock & Co. in business and marriage. So did distiller Alexander McGregor.

John Duncan, a reputable packer of English meats, located in Terre Haute in 1856, first associating with H. D. Williams & Co. and later with Jacob D. Early & Son.

By that time, railroads had succeeded flatboats as the primary means of transporting freight. In 1852 - the year the Terre Haute & Richmond Railroad commenced operations - a record 108,791 hogs were packed in Vigo County.

The Civil War had an impact upon pork merchants in the Wabash River valley. Trade with southern ports was thwarted. The facility owned by H. D. Williams & Co. was closed and converted into a Confederate prison for several months in 1862.

After the war, the pork industry remained vibrant. But unregulated freight rates imposed severe hardships on farmers. During 1870 and 1871, only Early Pork House - then owned and managed by Samuel Stockwell Early - was in operation.

Samuel Early closed it in 1879 and died in September of 1884.

T. H. Warehouse Turned Into Civil War Prison

By DOROTHY J. CLARK

THE ADJUTANT GENERAL'S report dated Feb. 28, 1862, stated that there were 4,000 rebel prisoners confined in Indianapolis, 800 at Lafayette and 500 at Terre Haute . . . "all placed in comfortable quarters, under safe guard. Their quarters are well-warmed with large stoves and have bunks furnished with clean straw.

"They receive the same subsistence in every respect as our own troops—consisting of full rations of coffee, fresh bread, meat, beans, hominy, rice, potatoes, etc.—indeed everything authorized by our Army Regulations.

"Some have received blankets and clothing from the U. S. Quartermaster . . . they are supplied with materials and allowed to write brief letters to their friends and families under the inspection of those in command. The sick are placed in comfortable hospitals in good, clean beds and receive proper subsistence and medical treatment from excellent physicians assisted by prisoners detailed as nurses."

When the fact was brought to Governor Morton's attention that about three hundred of the Fort Donelson captives were badly in need of clothing, he telegraphed the Secretary of War for orders to have their wants supplied by the U. S. Quartermaster at Indianapolis and the order was promptly given. After that whenever a prisoner needed clothes, shoes or whatever else that was essential to his health or comfort, the government supplied his needs.

Another account relates that after the capture of Fort Donelson a number of rebel prisoners were brought here and quartered at Farrington & Williams Pork House on South First a building that was afterward used by the distillery as a bonded warehouse. There were several hundred of these prisoners, principally from Tennessee. After being paroled, a number of them remained here, and it was said that some enlisted in the Union Army. Two escaped from the guard, but were recaptured south of the city. A number of them died and their bodies interred in Woodlawn cemetery.

800 Prisoners Here.

Still another source states that "on February 22 and 23, 1862, three thousand, seven hundred prisoners and some eighty officers arrived in Indianapolis. About eight hundred prisoners were also quartered at Terre Haute in large warehouses.

"The recruits of the Sixty-first or "Second Irish" Regiment under Colonel Bernard F. Mullen performed guard duty. A similar lot of prisoners were sent to Lafayette. The arrangements were only to be temporary, however, for all the prisoners were sent to Camp Morton at Indianapolis about the middle or end of March, 1862."

On arrival in Indiana many of the Fort Donelson and Fort Henry prisoners were sick from the terrible exposure to which they had been subjected. The men were thinly clad, unaccustomed to the rigors of outdoor life in winter and had been poorly fed. The prevailing diseases were pneumonia and diarrhea.

"Ample hospital arrangements were made, and everything that kindness or humanity could suggest was done to alleviate the distressing condition of the prisoners. The citizens of Indianapolis, Terre Haute and Lafayette responded to the calls of authorities and did all that was possible to be done in furnishing suitable nourishment, delicacies and attention. Despite all these efforts, the mortality was frightful during the first month or two. All who died were decently buried in plain wooden coffins, in the public cemeteries, and a record made of their names, regiments, etc., for the information of relatives and friends. After the weather moderated and grew warm a marked change took place in the general health of the prisoners and relatively few deaths occurred."

Whereabouts Never Proven.

The exact whereabouts of this Confederate prison had never been proven to my satisfaction, so I started my own investigation. One clue was found in an old newspaper—"the building where the Rebel prisoners of war were confined was the Farrington and Krumbhaar Pork House at about the 1800 block on South First street."

Another informant told of hearing their neighbor, old "Uncle" Lemuel Austin who has been dead for many years now, tell of the prison camp for Confederate captives during the Civil War which was "on the east side of First street, about three blocks south of Hulman, directly across the street from the present junkyard . . . nothing left but the foundation." At the time Mr. Austin spoke of this he was blind, a Union veteran of the Civil War, and lived on Arleth street.

The described location was looked over very carefully, and sure enough, there are hewn stone foundations still in place for a very large building—large enough to have been a warehouse a century ago.

In 1863 City Directory lists a slaughter house owned by Samuel McKeen & Company which was located on First street between Sheets and Farrington's addition. Sheets street is now known as Crawford street. Farrington's addition ran from Deming to College streets. So, this wasn't the packing house. The only other one listed in 1863 was Paddock's at the corner of Water and Swan streets.

In 1864 Samuel Paddock owned the Eagle Pork House, listed as on Water street between Swan and Oak, but the packing house was on South First street. Just where on South First is not given. M. G. Linn and H. B. Reed also ran a pork packing business on South First street, but the hundred block is not given.

The property where it is believed the prison was located during the Civil War is now known as the Scholz Heirs Subdivision. As far back as 1874 the land from First to Second streets and from Idaho to past McKeen street was vacant and listed in the Atlas belonging to the "Shutz" family. This was obviously a misspelling. The 1895 Atlas shows that the land was owned by William Scholz, and by 1907 the Atlas of that year gives the plot of land as the "Scholz Subdivision." From Idaho to McKeen the 172 feet by 196 feet section was divided into two 45-foot lots and the rest left in one piece.

If anyone has any more definite proof of the exact location of this Confederate prison please contact the writer at 2032 North Eighth street. During the Civil War Centennial I would like to see this site marked in some suitable manner.

CONFEDERATE PRISONERS

I Hear the Tread of Pioneers

By John G. Biel

10-24-58-18

On Feb. 26, 1862, residents of Terre Haute read in their newspaper, The Daily Express, that "the first lot of prisoners reached this city from St. Louis at 1 o'clock this morning. They remained on the train until daylight when they were escorted to Farrington & Williams Pork House by a detachment of the Sixty-first Regiment, Colonel Mullen. We have not yet been able to learn anything of the personnel of the prisoners. We believe they number about three hundred and fifty."

The old Farrington & Williams Pork House—then located at the foot of Park Street between First Street and the river bank—did not seem to need any remodeling or renovating; they just stopped butchering hogs one day and moved in the Confederate prisoners the next.

Terre Haute was chosen—as was Lafayette—to care for the overflow of prisoners from Camp Morton in Indianapolis. The camp there just could not care for all the prisoners captured at Fort Donelson no matter how tightly they were packed in. The whole trouble was that no one, in the early days of the Civil War, had even considered that there might be captured prisoners who would need attention, quarters, food and clothing. Neither the North or the South had set up any organization for the handling of prisoners. Of course—then—both sides thought the War would be of a very short duration and no attempt was made even to detain captured soldiers; they were paroled on giving their oats not to serve in the War until they could be exchanged—and they were sent home. With the fall of Fort Donelson, the first need for caring for great numbers of prisoners was brought suddenly into focus.

THE NUMBER OF PRISONERS taken at Fort Donelson is absolutely unknown. It seems peculiar, in this day and age of elaborate statistics, that such a fact could be, but it certainly is true. In fact, the Confederate officers did not even know how many men were in their companies, most of the time. There are various reports that the prisoners captured at Fort Donelson ran from 5,000 to 13,000. We do know that "some" 350 came to Terre Haute; "some" 800 went to Lafayette and "about" 3,700 went to Camp Morton at Indianapolis. These were the non-commissioned officers and the privates. The "general officers" were sent to a small island in Boston Harbor where Fort Warren was located; lesser commissioned officers were sent to Johnson's Island in the harbor of Sandusky, Ohio.

When General Halleck realized the serious problem on his hands of disposing of a great number of prisoners, he wanted to have them cared for—securely—without detaching any of his regular troops for that duty. He conceived the idea of requesting the various states to take them off his hands. He wired Indiana's Governor, Oliver P. Morton, asking him how many he could care for. Morton, without thinking—or checking any facilities—replied that he could take 3,000. By February 22, they started arriving in Indianapolis—over 3,700 of them! By the time the "flood" was stemmed, Terre Haute and Lafayette also were allocated a number. Although Terre Haute's newspaper indicated only 350—the editor saying "we believe they number about 350"—other records indicate that more than 800 were quartered at Terre Haute.

Camp Morton, in Indianapolis, was located on the old State Fair grounds which had been converted into a camp for Indiana troops at the beginning of the war. Immediately, additional barracks were thrown up—nothing elaborate, of course, as it was felt the bare necessary. Some men were quartered in the individual horse stalls which were left over from the days of the Fair. As additional quarters became available, the men from Terre Haute and Lafayette were transferred to Indianapolis.

A GREAT MANY of these prisoners died. Some were sick when they arrived; all had been subjected to terrible exposure and transported to Indiana in the month of February with insufficient food, no winter clothing—some with very little clothing at all—and no blankets. There were just not enough supplies for the soldiers and the prisoners—even food—and, of course, our soldiers were supplied first.

At Terre Haute, a hospital—of sorts—was set up for the sick prisoners. It was put in charge of a Doctor Rust but, in spite of his care and attention, many men died. They were buried in Woodlawn Cemetery in unmarked graves. Early after the War was over, a monument was erected in their memory. Later, October 28, 1951—the present monument in what is called "Confederate Circle" was erected and as many names of soldiers who died here as could be authenticated were carved on the sides. These men ranged in age from 19 years to 39 years. They were mostly from Robert Gantt's Ninth Battalion of Tennessee Cavalry and from the Twenty-sixth Mississippi Regiment.

Terre Haute tried to treat these prisoners humanely—but it was hard when the citizens of the town were suffering from losses of their own who were killed, wounded and missing in the same battle where these men had been fighting. Still, the women of the town collected bandages, jellies and clothing for them. The Daily Express reported, under date of March 1, 1862, that Colonel Mullen had permitted the ministers in the city to take some members of their congregations and hold services at the prison camp, indicating that "of course, the ministers, in accordance with the general arrangements, will arrange among themselves the days upon which they will severally attend the barracks."

Several prisoners escaped while they were detained here. Two were captured "about two miles south of the city" and when they were asked why they had not gone on further, they replied: "Well, this is a good country and we have decided to settle." When a general exchange of prisoners was ordered, many of the Confederates did not want to be exchanged. They did not want to go back to fighting; they were not in sympathy with the secession policies of their political leaders in the first place.

The old Pork House in Terre Haute was "glorified" with the name of Camp Harrison, while the Confederate prisoners were here—but it was still the old Pork House.

Ever Know Confederate Monument Still Stands In Woodlawn Cemetery?

History (TH) Civil War

By A. R. Markle.

DURING the Civil War a number of Confederate prisoners were brought to Terre Haute and part of these were kept in the old Farrington and Williams Pork House. In February of 1863 the Express reports that some of these prisoners were found to be armed with knives, pistols and ammunition. They were marched out under guard, searched, and disarmed.

On one occasion two of them escaped, but were captured a few days later about two miles south of the city.

Eleven of these prisoners died here. All but one of them was taken in the battle in eastern Tennessee. The exception was John R. Holcomb of Company G and the twentieth Mississippi Regiment.

The others were members of Company A. Grant's Ninth Battalion, and the Tennessee Regiment. These were as follows: John L. Johnson, Robert H. Maxwell, Guilford D. Nunnally, William P. Thogmortan, George N. Zollicoffer, Thomas S. Davidson, Isaac M. Foster, Thomas S. Bryan, Benjamin F. Cockrell and Francis M. Galiager.

Plates Stolen.

Several years after the war was over an act of Congress provided for a monument to be erected in Woodlawn Cemetery where they were buried. As it was impossible to locate their burial place, they being buried as paupers in single lots, a small monument was erected on the south side of the street running west from the main entrance. The monument was two bronze plates bearing the name and rank of these eleven men and another plate reciting the reason for the monument. In later years vandals stripped the two plates bearing the names and attempted to sell them for old metal. For some reason they failed to sell them, probably because they were government property and punishment would be very severe in case of prosecution. By some means word got to the authorities and these two plates were recovered in the Wash bottoms. Their further history has been lost.

A new and larger monument was erected in 1951 and suitably dedicated on Oct. 28 of that year in a more suitable location.

The original Woodlawn Cemetery was made up of four blocks lying between Second and Fourth avenues extended and between First and Thirds streets.

When a survey of the new cemetery was made in 1839 the point where Third avenue and Second street would intersect was laid out a large circle which might eventually be occupied by a fountain. If such was the intention, there could have been no fountain for another thirty-three years and even then it would be several more years before water could be supplied from the new water works. This circle then provided a very fit place for a monument such as stands there today. Before this monument was erected and the new plates mounted on it, considerable research was required through the newspaper and other records to obtain the names which the quartermaster's office in St. Louis was able to use in casting of the much larger plates on this new monument. Having the service records of these deceased soldiers, the writer contacted the Tennessee Historical Society at Nashville a year or so later, visited them, and gave them this list of veterans.

A Civil War Incident in Patricksburg

By DOROTHY J. CLARK

Int - Star Oct 9 - 1960

In a little paper-backed "History of Patricksburg, Indiana," written by Wm. R. Williams in 1911, there appears an incident which happened many times during the Civil War in different towns in the state of Indiana. Because the incident is so typical of those times, has a connection with Middletown, and involved the grandfather and great-grandfather of Byron Harrold and his son, Conway Harrold, well-known residents of this city, I decided to pass it on to my readers.

In the chapter on military history the author stated: "I desire to relate a little incident that occurred back in 1862. One Merwin, full of fun and always ready to play a joke, purported to have received a letter from Governor Morton, in which the "home guard" was instructed to report at Indianapolis immediately. In order to carry out the joke, Merwin rushed out into the street with a drum, beat it as if his life depended upon it—the long roll. Hurring to the nearest blacksmith shop, he carried an anvil into the street and proceeded to fire it. Consternation reigned, and during the hurrying and scurrying about of the excited villagers the intrepid Merwin bravely mounted a dry goods box and made a "spread eagle" speech that set the neighborhood on fire, as it were. Wives crying, husbands bidding them good-bye. Some of the home guard began to show symptoms of all sorts of diseases—in fact, they were sick, oh, so sick. They could not even think of going to the front. Merwin, full of laugh, almost to the bursting point, could not keep his joke any longer. His story was false and the letter a fake. Mad! That did not spell the word, when the whimpering wives and weak-kneed soldiers found that they had been made the butt of one of Merwin's jokes . . ."

Wartime Notoriety

Author Williams went on: "We are not without wartime notoriety. A powerful force of warriors from the South invaded our town, once upon a time. Twenty-four men—all generals, armed from the belt to shoulder-knots, steel and muskets glistening, glittering in the bright rays of the eastern sun. At the command of halt from the 'General General' as they dismounted and struck camp near the eastern side of town. A force of spies was sent into 'Camp Saloon' to ascertain the strength of the enemy. The strength and supply was found to be about equal. The spies finally captured 'Demi John' and proceeded to carry him back to the camp, and upon their arrival there all made merry at the expense of their captured friend. A war dance was held around 'Demi John' and reel after reel was danced. By the time the gray dawn came peeping over the hills, they were all in a maudlin state and ready to face anyone, even the enemy. Suddenly the cry of 'On to Victory' stirred the men to the danger point. The password of the day, 'Remember Waterloo,' was passed from mouth to mouth, their good, old trusty squirrel rifles examined and a warlike dash was made into town. Consternation reigned among the inhabitants. Excitement ran riot. The town was invaded, apparently by an enemy. Through the main thoroughfare they galloped at breakneck speed. At the ringing command of 'Comanee. Halt!' the brave (?) men stopped at the bidding of their valiant commander. They had stopped in front of the home of Frank Harrold, who at that time was in the service of his country. In loud tones they demanded his surrender and the possession of a certain man, Isaacs, whom he had recently captured.

"That the reader may better understand the meaning of this invasion, we will recite the incident as it actually occurred. The body of men, who purported to be soldiers were nothing more than the local organization of the Knights of the Golden Circle, who were sympathizers with the South but who did not have nerve enough to come out boldly and declare their teachings to the public. The man Isaacs was an organizer of these bodies. He was then in the locality of Middletown proceeding with his work. Frank Harrold, a loyal, patriotic citizen, had left his family and gone to the front to help protect the nation. He had been given the position of Orderly Sergeant in Co. F, 71st Regt. Indiana Volunteers. He had been assigned to special duty as Provost Marshal, under Colonel Carrington at Indianapolis and his work was that of hunting up deserters and others who were working against the government. Isaacs was busy with his organization work in various parts of the state and notice of this had come to the army authorities and Sgt. Harrold was sent out on a special mission to get this 'Copperhead,' dead or alive. At this critical time it was such men as Isaacs who were doing more to undermine the government than the whole Southern Confederacy, and they were treated with as much contempt as though they had been spies. Isaacs was a muchly-wanted citizen, for he had been very prominent in this work of organization. Harrold's instructions were to hunt up this man and arrest him at all hazards. Upon his arrival at his home at Patricksburg, he was informed by loyal advisers that Isaacs was then in the vicinity of Middletown and he proceeded there at once. Waiting at the post office, he did not have long to tarry, when he walked his "man" and asked of the postmaster, 'Is there any mail for Isaacs?' Before he could get his next breath, Harrold had the man in irons and at once started back to Patricksburg with his capture, but upon his arrival there loyal friends advised that he had better take the man and leave town at once and get into a more loyal neighborhood than theirs. Harrold did this, and had been away from town several hours when this, the desperate charge described in the beginning, occurred. This body of the Knights of Golden Circle was under the command of Captain Nathan Harrington, and they thought it their loyal duty to recapture this man and give him his freedom. When the company stopped in front of Harrold's home and demanded the surrender, there was not a living soul in the house . . .

Soldier Gets Revenge.

"Upon arrival at Indianapolis, Sergeant Harrold turned his prisoner over to the government authorities. Some time before this incident occurred, Isaacs had borrowed a horse of David Randolph, a citizen of the county, to ride about the country. Upon learning of his imprisonment, Randolph, together with John Laymon, went to Indianapolis and gave bail for Isaac's freedom. This was done that Randolph might get his horse back. Isaacs, after temporarily getting out of this difficulty, took up his work once more. When up in the vicinity of Kokomo, where his affection for the rebels was not so well appreciated, he was taken out by a band of loyal citizens, one night, and strung up by the neck, until he was dead.

"At the treatment he had received, Harrold felt that not only his country had been insulted, but that the sanctity of his own home had been invaded, and at the close of the war, at a soldier's reunion held at Spencer, on July 4, 1865, he met Harrington on the west side of the public square, and talking to him as they walked across the street into the courthouse yard, his indignation became so intense that he knocked Harrington down and proceeded to chastise him in a way that he needed; in other words, he gave him an old-fashioned whipping."

I'd be interested in hearing from anyone with information about the activities of the Knights of the Golden Circle in this locality, the counties of the Wabash Valley. Contact: Dorothy J. Clark, 2032 North Eighth street, Terre Haute, Indiana.

A Much-Wounded Soldier of the Civil War

By DOROTHY J. CLARK

According to Mrs. Herschel Compton of this city, her grandfather, E. S. Harrold of Patrickburg, Indiana, was one of seven brothers who fought for the Union during the Civil War. Of these seven men only Jesse was wounded, once for each of his brothers as the story was always told in the family.

The career of Lieut. Jesse S. Harrold, Company H, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry, is probably one of the most remarkable in the history of the Great Rebellion. His birthplace was a farm near Mooresville, Ind. In 1861 he was living at Spencer, and like others of that time he was keenly aware of the war talk and watched with eager eyes the exciting trend of affairs.

When President Lincoln on April 15th issued his call for volunteers this happy-go-lucky youth suddenly became a man with definite aims and purposes. Harrold, with a brother, was conducting a carriage ironing shop in Spencer. When news of the call reached him he had a carriage job half done. He threw his hammer into a corner, took down an old rifle and began oiling it. He knew that was coming.

That night a group of young men met and drafted an agreement binding together a company, and on April 19th they sent a wire to Governor Morton, offering their services. The company was later reorganized for three year's service and became Company H, Fourteenth Indiana Volunteer Infantry. Their first engagement was at Cheat Mountain in West Virginia, which was only a skirmish.

At the battle of Greenbriar, on October 3, 1861, Pvt. Harrold made a record capture, corralling single-handed nine Confederates in one group. On March 23, 1862, Company H experienced its first big fight at Winchester, Va., and here Harrold received his first wound of the war, a minor flesh wound.

The Fourteenth Indiana was ordered to join the army of the Potomac on July 3, 1862 at Harrison's Landing, Va. At Antietam, Maryland, on September 17, 1862, the Fourteenth began to realize what war really was, and there also began Corporal Harrold's remarkable series of wounds.

This regiment was opposite Bloody Lane, where the hardest fighting occurred. It was the bloodiest battle of the war and neither side could lay claim to much of a victory. The Fourteenth had 320 men engaged and 181 were killed or wounded, a little over 54 per cent. Company H lost six men.

In this battle Jesse Harrold received four gunshot wounds, all in quick succession, which made five punctures in his body. In fact, he was shot four times before he fell to the ground, in a veritable hail of lead. He was first shot in the right thigh, causing a flesh wound. The second shot came quickly and caught him in the left elbow. While holding his arm and leaning over, the third shot struck him in the back of the head, splitting his head from base to crown. He threw his right hand to his head and the fourth shot entered the point of his left shoulder and came out below the shoulder blade.

He was carried back to the field hospital and placed in a fence corner. The nights were cold and he started out to find his knapsack and blanket. Being slightly delirious, he became lost and wandered into the rebel lines and out again. All night he tramped the battlefield without food or water, before he realized what he was doing. When he partially recovered his senses he returned to his fence corner and lay down.

The Federal troops were forced to care for the wounded of both sides and had to bury the rebel dead as well as their own, so Harrold lay in a fence corner for five days waiting on himself, without medical attention, except when a hospital steward took seven stitches in the back of his head. On September 22 he received his first real medical attention. His wounds were dressed and he was sent to a hospital where his elbow was resected, after which he lay for 64 days on an iron bed, turning neither to right nor left and taking no medicine. The day after the battle Harrold had been promoted to Second Lieutenant, but it was some time before he knew about it.

Returns to Duty.

By December he was back to duty and fought at Fredericksburg. On May 1, 2 and 3, 1863, occurred the battle of Chancellorsville where "Fighting Joe" Hooker crossed the Rapidan, intending to move on Richmond, but was met by Lee and Stonewall Jackson. The first day's fighting consisted mostly of skirmishing, but on the two days following the Fourteenth saw hard service. On the third day Harrold received his worst wound of the war. A minie (or musket) ball weighing nine drams entered the lower abdomen and furrowed its way through the bowels. He dropped in his tracks and was picked up by his comrades and carried in a blanket some four miles through the burning wilderness to the United States Road.

Here he was placed on a stretcher preparatory to the long trip to the hospital. He was in a critical condition, suffering intense pain, and seemingly a hopeless case. His comrades carried him 15 miles to Stoneman's Station where he was placed on a flat car and sent to Aquia Creek. There he was transferred to the boat "Mary Washington" on the Potomac and sent to Washington, D. C. From the landing he was carried along Pennsylvania avenue on a stretcher, the pedestrians staring at him in morbid curiosity. In speaking of the affair in later years Jesse laughingly said he had his "Grand Review" down Pennsylvania avenue some time before the rest of the army.

Miraculously there was a gradual improvement in Harrold's condition with few setbacks and on June 13th he was discharged from the Georgetown Hospital and allowed to go home on leave of absence. His brother was notified to come after him and through some misunderstanding or mistake in the telegram, the brother understood he was to come for the corpse. He was very much surprised to find a live lieutenant waiting for him. When Harrold reached home he had the dubious pleasure of reading his obituary in three newspapers—the Indianapolis Journal, the Owen County Journal and the Gosport News.

During his convalescence, Daniel W. Voorhees, the "Tall Sycamore of the Wabash" visited him and told him it was a miracle to be shot with a Belgian ball and recover. Harrold considered it even more wonderful that he should lie for over two months in hot weather without blood poisoning setting in.

While at home regaining his strength he received an appointment to serve on the staff of Colonel Coons, so on September 3, 1863, he left from Indianapolis for New York. The Fourteenth and the Twenty-seventh Indiana had been ordered there to quell the draft riot. On their arrival the rioting was over and the two regiments were ordered by water to Alexandria, Va. Harrold by this time was so weak he could hardly leave his room, and went by ambulance to join his command.

"My God, man!" said Col. Coons when he saw Harrold, "What are you doing here?"

"I got your letter, sir, and have come for duty. As soon as I get a breath of Virginia air and some sowbelly and beans I'll be OK," replied Harrold.

"I admire your grit," said Coons, "but d—n your judgment." Harrold was returned to Georgetown Hospital where he was declared unfit for duty and at their recommendation Harrold was honorably discharged for wounds under special order No. 321, signed by Edwin M. Stanton, secretary of war. As far as can be ascertained, it is the only case of the kind in the history of the war.

On September 17, 1910, 48 years after the battle of Antietam, Harrold was present at the unveiling of the imposing monument erected by Indiana to her five regiments that participated in that fight. Harrold had with him the old blouse that he wore the day he received four shots in quick succession and it was a feature of the dedication exercises. A few days before an old musket had been unearthed by workmen who were ditching to preserve Bloody Lane and this gun was presented to him.

In 1911 Jesse Harrold's home was in Lewis, Indiana. His six wounds didn't seem to bother him much except the elbow wound which had caused the joint to become immovable.

His six brothers were all located in Indiana. W. W., A. M. and J. Wash Harrold were living in Terre Haute; E. F. and T. M. Harrold were in Patrickburg, and J. R. Harrold was in Spencer.

The First Military Execution in the West

By DOROTHY J. CLARK

During the Civil War there was one particularly unusual bit of history concerning the Seventy-first Regiment, Indiana Volunteers, which was organized at Camp Dick Thompson in Terre Haute in the summer of 1862. Company D of this regiment was composed of Clay County men. As their officers they chose: Daniel A. Conover, captain; Edward A. Thompson, 1st lieut.; Thomas Cullen, 2nd lieut., and T. M. Robertson, orderly sgt., all of Bowling Green.

The regiment left Indianapolis on July 18, 1862, for Richmond, Ky., where Lieut. Col. Melville

Topping and Maj. William Conkling of Terre Haute are known to have been killed. Many others were killed or wounded in this engagement. Twice captured and exchanged as prisoners of war, the regiment had a varied history. Company D spent one summer guarding provisions at Camp Morton and pursuing John Morgan and his raiders.

Connected with the history of Company D is one of the most notable incidents of the war. It was the execution of Robert Gay of Clay County by order of court martial, on a charge of desertion. The following account of the affair relating the circumstances attending the execution is taken from a pamphlet published and extensively circulated at the time.

"Friday afternoon, a little after three o'clock, on the 27th day of March, 1863, Robert Gay, a member of Company D, Seventy-first Indiana Volunteers, was shot by order of Court Martial, near Camp Morton, in this city (Indianapolis) for desertion. We believe this is the first execution for such an offense, or any military offense, in the West."

The order of execution stated that "Private Robert Gay did, on or about the 5th day of September, 1862, desert his company, his regiment, and the services of the United States, and did take the oath of allegiance to serve the enemy, to wit, the Confederate States, so called, and to serve them faithfully against all their enemies or opposers whomsoever."

Explanation of the Case.

It seems that Gay requested the privilege of taking the oath of allegiance to the confederacy, and came back home with the written oath sewed into his clothes "for perfect concealment showing that he knew exactly the nature of his act and the importance of evading detection. When arrested, General Carrington searched him and found the fatal document concealed in the leg of his pantaloons. There is, therefore, no room for sympathy or ground for doubt. He was fearfully guilty . . . an intelligent man, and of fair attainments. He was consequently, entitled to less consideration than an ignorant or stupid man who might be supposed to know less of the real nature of his offense. In his last speech he urged in extenuation of his conduct that his health unfitted him for a soldier's duties, and he was at that moment, just on the brink of death, in better health than he had ever been in his life. He said he did not feel able to do his duty, and took the oath of allegiance to the confederacy in order that he might not, as a paroled prisoner, be exchanged and forced to return to the service, but get a chance to stay at home. His guilt he admitted, but said it was the result of thoughtlessness, and not a deliberate purpose to desert his country. . . ."

Robert Gay came to Indiana from one of the river counties of Ohio. For a few years prior to his enlistment, he had been teaching school near Bowling Green, Clay County. After taking the fatal oath, he returned home to Clay County where he was arrested. He was about 27 years of age, rather above the average height, slender, and looked, as he said, by no means in robust health. He had no family or near relatives.

Foils Would-Be Spectators.

In order to avoid a large crowd of spectators who might create a disturbance and to avoid the possibility of an attempt at rescue, of which a good many hints had been thrown out the day before by the Knights of the Golden Circle, the General first gave out that the execution would take place at 5 p.m. And to throw off guard those who might watch his movements for an intimation of the time, he kept a squad of cavalry at his headquarters with his horse ready saddled, as if about to start, during the whole afternoon, sent off an escort for the prisoner quietly by a back street, and never went to the execution at all. By this precaution, he managed to keep away thousands who would have embarrassed the proceedings and kept the crowd down to two or three hundred civilians.

Some days previous to his execution, Gay was sent from the Soldier's Home where he had been kept after his sentence, to the County Jail. He was taken from jail about half past 2 o'clock and conveyed in a closed carriage to the ground. The place of execution was the open field between Burnside Barracks and Camp Morton. Here the Seventy-first was drawn up in a hollow square, with the open side to the east. Into this square a number of gentlemen invited to be present were admitted by Col. Biddle and had a full view of the whole scene. In a few minutes after this arrangement was completed, the Sixty-third came up, with drums beating, and marched right past the carriage containing the prisoner, who leaned his head partially out of the window to watch them as they formed on the south side of the square. The cavalry were placed on the outside of the Sixty-third and the artillery on the west and north sides. Thus a compact mass of soldiers of all arms was formed, leaving a little vacant space in the middle.

The coffin of plain black walnut, with a flat lid, was brought out and laid in the open end of the square some distance up toward the center. An officer stepped off slowly a space of some 25 or 30 feet from the coffin to fix the line to be occupied by the firing party of twenty men, two from each company, formed in two ranks.

The soldiers stood as impassive as statues as four men walked in to the open space and stood in front of the coffin. These four were the prisoner, the Sergeant Major whose duty it was to blindfold him, the Chaplain, and an unnamed friend of the accused.

Final Story.

Army regulations provide that the firing party shall not know whose gun holds the fatal bullet. The twenty guns were loaded, ten with ball, and ten with heavy blank cartridges. The soldiers who were to fire did not see the loading done, but drew their guns, as they came, out of a confused heap, so that no one could tell whether his gun contained a ball or not.

After a few last words by the prisoner who retained his composure to the last, and a prayer from the Chaplain, the Sergeant Major tied Gay's hands, placed the band of black cloth across his eyes, and all was ready. A whisper to firing party brought all the guns to a "ready." The clicking of the cocks was heard distinctly all around. The guns were lowered to take aim, and their crash followed instantly. At the explosion, Gay fell straight back over his coffin, without a sound or struggle, killed instantly. In a few moments he was lifted into the coffin, the bandage taken off his eyes, and his little blue cap put on his head. The coffin was put into Undertaker Weaver's wagon, the troops were dismissed, and the most impressive and dreadful scene ever witnessed in Indianapolis, the first military execution in the West, was over.

Rebels imprisoned here

Records show Confederates treated well

T's JUN 1 1986

Community Affairs File

According to the Adjutant General's report dated Feb. 28, 1862, there were 4,000 rebel prisoners confined in Indianapolis, 800 in Lafayette and 500 at Terre Haute, "all placed in comfortable quarters, under safe guard. Their quarters were well-warmed with large heating stoves and have bunks furnished with clean straw."

"They receive the same subsistence in every respect as our own troops, consisting of full rations of coffee, fresh bread, meat, beans, hominy, rice, potatoes, etc. ... indeed everything authorized by our Army Regulations."

"Some have received blankets and clothing from the U.S. Quartermaster ... they are supplied with materials and are allowed to write brief letters to their friends and families under the inspection of those in command. The sick are placed in comfortable hospitals in good clean beds and receive proper subsistence and medical treatment from excellent physicians assisted by prisoners detailed as nurses."

It was brought to Governor Morton's attention that about 300 of the Fort Donelson captives were badly in need of clothing. He telegraphed the Secretary of War for orders to have their needs supplied by the U.S. Quartermaster at Indianapolis, and the order was given promptly. Whenever a prisoner needed clothes, shoes or whatever else that was essential to his health or comfort, the government supplied his needs.

Another account tells that after the capture of Fort Donelson, a number of rebel prisoners were brought to Terre Haute and quartered at Farrington and Williams pork house on South First Street, a building that was later used by the distillery as a bonded warehouse.

Special to The Tribune-Star

There were several hundred of these prisoners, principally from Tennessee. After being paroled, a number of them remained here, some even enlisted in the Union Army. Two escaped from the guard, but were recaptured south of the city. A few of them died. They were buried in Woodlawn Cemetery.

Another source states that "on Feb. 22 and 23, 1862, 3,700 prisoners and some 80 officers arrived in Indianapolis. About 800 were also quartered at Terre Haute in large warehouses."

The recruits of the 61st or "Second Irish" Regiment under Col. Bernard F. Mullen performed guard duty. Another lot of captives was sent to Lafayette. The arrangements were only to be temporary, however, because all the prisoners were sent to Camp Morton at Indianapolis between the middle and end of March 1862.

Many of the Fort Donelson and Fort Henry rebel prisoners were sick on arrival in Indiana from the terrible exposure to which they had been subjected. Thinly clad and poorly fed, they were unaccustomed to the rigors of outdoor life in Hoosier winters. The prevailing diseases were pneumonia and diarrhea.

Ample hospital arrangements were made and everything that kindness or humanity could suggest was done to alleviate the distressing condition of the rebel prisoners.

The citizens of Indianapolis, Terre Haute and Lafayette responded to the calls for help from the authorities and furnished suitable nourishment, delicacies and attention. Despite all these efforts, however, the mortality rate was frightful during the first months.

All who died were decently buried in plain wooden coffins, in public cemeteries and a record was made of their names, regiments, etc., for the information of relatives and friends. When the weather moderated and grew warm, a marked change took place in the general health of the southern prisoners and relatively few deaths occurred.

The exact whereabouts of the Confederate prison was difficult to pin down. An old newspaper clipping told of "the building where the Rebel prisoners of war were confined was in the Farrington & Krumbhaar pork house at about the 1800 block of South First Street."

Another source related how ole "Uncle" Lemuel Austin used to tell of the prison camp for Confederate captives during the Civil War which was "on the east side of First Street, about three blocks south of Hulman, directly across the street from the present junk yard ... nothing left but the foundation." At the time Austin spoke of this, he was a blind Union veteran living on Arleth Street.

There are hewn stone foundations still in place for a large building, large enough to have been a warehouse over a century ago.

The property where the rebel prison was located during the Civil War was later known as the Scholz Heir's Subdivision. As far back as 1874 the land from First to Second streets and from Idaho past McKeen streets was vacant and listed in the atlas as belonging to the Shutz family.

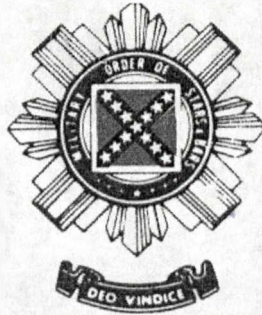

The 1895 atlas shows the land owned by William Scholz, and by the 1907 atlas, the plot of land was labeled Scholz Subdivision. From Idaho to McKeen the 172-by-196-foot section was divided into two 45-foot lots and the rest left in one piece.

Hahn's recollections of the rebel prisoners told of the "big slaughter house where about 1,000 southern soldiers were brought. At First and Main was located a hospital where wounded men were cared for." He recalled that a German youth was in this hospital and his father took soup over to his wounded friend. "Once I recall that Pa went home and got all of the soup, and I didn't get any."

Word was being circulated that Morgan was coming our way. It so happened he changed his course, but later when local citizenry saw several hundred Confederates coming down the main thoroughfare, they thought that Morgan and his men had indeed arrived.

Col. Mullin's official report of Feb. 27, 1862, mentions "the prison barracks are the pork houses and our buildings belonging to Williams' company. The two warehouses were called Camp Harrison."

If anyone has more definite proof of the exact location of this Confederate prison, please contact me at 2032 N. Eighth St., Terre Haute 47804. At some future time this site should be marked in a suitable manner.

*CONFEDERATE VETERANS BURIED IN CROWN HILL CEMETERY,
INDIANAPOLIS, INDIANA*

During the War Between the States (Civil War), 1,745 Confederate prisoners-of-war died at Camp Morton, and were buried in Green Lawn Cemetery (also known as the City Cemetery) in downtown Indianapolis. A monument listing the names of the deceased prisoners was placed in the cemetery.

In 1928 through 1931, the burial location of the deceased prisoners-of-war was excavated, and 1,616 of the remains were placed in about 20 wooden boxes. The remains were reburied in the wooden boxes in Crown Hill Cemetery in a mass grave.

The original monument listing the names from Green Lawn Cemetery was relocated to Garfield Park. The story is told that it was felt that it would be impossible to place the monument above the remains because of its' weight.

The monument subsequently placed at Crown Hill listed the soldiers as "Unknown".

In 1993, 10 new bronze plaques on granite monuments listing the soldiers' names were placed by the United States Veterans Administration (see attached article "Confederate Memorial Lot to Be Rededicated in Public Ceremony") and the plaque indicating "Unknown" on the monument at Crown Hill was covered up. The attached list is a copy of the names listed on the 10 plaques at Crown Hill Cemetery.

The original monument is still in Garfield Park. It is in a very poor and declining condition. Efforts are being made now to correct this situation. Attached are copies of portions of the January and February, 1914 "Confederate Veteran" magazine which lists the names of the prisoners-of-war that were buried at Green Lawn Cemetery.

Confederate Memorial Lot to Be Rededicated in Public Ceremony

In February, 1862, the first of several thousand Confederate prisoners-of-war were marched through the north side of Indianapolis to Camp Morton following a long train ride from southern Tennessee. Many of these, and others who followed, died here over the next three years.

In all, 1,745 Confederate soldiers died while confined at Camp Morton (located between Delaware and Central Streets and 19th and 22nd Streets). All were originally buried at the City Cemetery situated on the near southwest side of the city. In 1931, 1,616 of these southern soldiers—those not removed by loved ones to their homes following the war—were reinterred at Crown Hill Cemetery.

Since that date a large monument has marked the Confederate lot, but no specific soldier identification has marked the mass grave. This year that changes as ten bronze plaques mounted on granite bases and containing the veterans' names, military units and dates of death will be placed at the grave site. This project was initiated and vigorously pursued by Stephen Staletovich, a member of the Indianapolis Police Department's mounted patrol. The casting of the bronze plaques was funded by the United States Veterans Administration.

On Sunday, October 3, 1993, these monuments and the lot itself will be dedicated with full military ceremonies. The Old Guard memorial squad of the Indiana National Guard (including honor guard, black horse troop, caisson, and riderless horse) will lead a solemn parade from the Gothic Chapel to the grave site. Soil of each former Confederate state and the "Indian Territory" (Oklahoma) will be transported to the site. An escort of confederate reenactment personnel will participate in the march.

Services at the Confederate mound will be highlighted by music from the 74th Army Band from Ft. Benjamin Harrison and an address from Congressmen Andy Jacobs Jr., who was highly visible with his assistance in making this memorial possible.

The public is encouraged to be present for these historic ceremonies scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m. on October 3rd. A reception at the Gothic Chapel will immediately follow the address and placement of "native soil" and floral wreath.

VOL. XXII. NASHVILLE, TENN., JANUARY, 1914.

No. 1. } S. A. CUNNINGHAM
PROPRIETOR.

PATRIOTIC BEQUEST TO THE SOUTH.

BATESVILLE, ARK., October 2, 1909.

To Whom It May Concern:

I, S. A. Cunningham, have never made a will of any kind. I do so now solely in the interest of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN. My possessions are small, therefore such action is not of much importance to my family. For what I possess I am so deeply indebted to the generous, patriotic people of the South that I feel it due them to contribute what I have as herein briefly set forth to the perpetuation of such history as is so far recorded in the VETERAN. For this purpose I have come to Batesville, Ark., to engage the active service of my friend, Col. V. Y. Cook, who has shown a patriotism and a friendship for me and the work without stint and without limit, beyond any man living. This he has proved; but I owe him nothing but gratitude and good will.

I so regard the importance of perpetuating the VETERAN that I hereby set apart all property of which I am possessed or may acquire, after paying my debts and after the payment of one thousand dollars to my beloved sister, the wife of Thomas W. Wakefield, living near Cornersville, Tenn. I have other relatives, for all of whom I have affectionate esteem; but my sense of duty as set forth above impels me to bequeath what I have, as set forth, for the indefinite perpetuation of the VETERAN. However, when the time comes, as it evidently will, when the publication ceases, then it is my desire that whatever of assets may exist shall belong to my estate.

It is my wish that a Board of Trust, in the event of my death, be empowered to take full charge of my possessions, consisting of money due me, of certain real estate recorded in my name, of two policies of life insurance from the Union Central Insurance Company of Cincinnati, of $3,000 and $2,000 (upon one of which policies I owe perhaps $1,000), my library, and all articles of value which may belong to me and are not herein mentioned.

This Board of Trust I desire to be composed of Col. V. Y. Cook, of Batesville, Ark., as President; Maj. R. H. Dudley, of Nashville, Tenn.; Col. Bennett H. Young, of Louisville, Ky.; Gen. K. M. VanZandt, of Fort Worth, Tex.; Miss E. D. Pope, of Nashville, Tenn.; and, ex officio, the Commander in Chief of the United Confederate Veterans (now Gen. Clement A. Evans, of Atlanta, Ga.), the Commander in Chief of the United Sons of Confederate Veterans (now Clarence M. Owens, of Abbeville, Ala.), the President General of the United Daughters of the Confederacy (now Mrs. Cornelia Branch Stone, of Galveston, Tex.), and the President of the Confederated Southern Memorial Association (now Mrs. W. J. Behan, of New Orleans, La.). This Board of Trust is requested to meet at the VETERAN office in Nashville, Tenn., as soon as practicable in the event of my death and take charge of all matters herein indicated. It would be necessary to appoint an agent to adjust all business matters and to select an editor for the publication. * * *

The appointment of the members of this Board of Trust has been made without conference but in the faith that they will gladly serve. It is requested that any vacancy by death may be supplied by the mutual agreement of the surviving members.

This is written by myself, and may not be strictly legal in every sense; but it is believed that my motive of integrity and duty would prevent any one's taking advantage of any such error. It is the deliberate act of myself, and I pray that its spirit will be faithfully executed in the event of my death.

S. A. Cunningham

VOL. XXII.

NASHVILLE, TENN., FEBRUARY, 1914.

No. 2.

S. A. CUNNINGHAM
PROPRIETOR.

REQUIESCAT IN PACE.

[Written by Hugh G. Barclay for the CONFEDERATE VETERAN in memory of S. A. Cunningham, late editor.]

Alas, a knightly man is dead!

The tidings came like bolt from cloudless sky;
And we stand dazed, our senses fled,
Except to ask in trembling whisper, Why?

For all men loved him, all who knew
His rapt devotion to our Southern land;
And, too, for what he tried to do
To bind the sections in a deathless band,

To make the North and South as one
In thought and effort; to at last restore
The trust and love of time long gone,
That strife and hatred cloud our land no more.

But his great soul has passed across
The stately river where dead heroes meet
In sacred conclave, where no dross
Of life's base passions may life's aim defeat.

God called him, knowing what is best.
We bow to him, and yet—and yet—we know
A king of men has gone to rest;
And may God's laurels rest upon his brow!

OFFICIAL TRIBUTE BY U. C. V.

[Headquarters United Confederate Veterans, New Orleans, La., December 26, 1913. General Orders No. 16.]

When on December 20, 1913, Col. S. A. Cunningham, editor and owner of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN, was called to a higher and nobler life, the Association suffered an irreparable loss. He will be more missed in the work and mission of the Association than any member of it.

His sudden death, the sad circumstances surrounding his demise, and the sudden end to his noble and unselfish work have saddened the hearts of every man and woman in the entire Southland.

He was a brave, unselfish, and patriotic soldier. His heart was full of pride in the achievements of the men who followed the Confederate flag, and none appreciated more than he the glorious history of the women of the South nor understood better than he the trials, sufferings, patience, sorrows, and want which made the mothers, wives, and sisters of the South the most glorious type of womanhood of which history has kept record.

For more than twenty years he has been diligently, and with no thought of self and with no sparing of self, giving his life to gathering the details of what the soldiers and women of the Confederate States did to win from fate national life and independence. With highest ideals ever before him, he worked with incessant patience and unflagging zeal. The vindication of the principles for which the South fought and the true story of the valor, courage, and sufferings of its armies became the great passion of his life. His loyalty to the memories of the South's dead and his kindness and help to its living endeared him to every Confederate organization. Bereaved of his wife and children, he took up his work of love; and no man, living or dead, has ever done more toward giving the Confederate nation its place in history than the editor of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN.

While not a man of brilliant intellect, he was a man of abounding faith, hope, and energy. He was tireless in the task that he felt Providence had assigned him to do. He believed that he had been designed by God to do the very work in which he was engaged, and that he did it well no one can doubt.

His creation, the CONFEDERATE VETERAN, has maintained a unique place in military journalism and in its chosen paths has never been surpassed. It was the center of Confederate plans and impulses, and every part of the South felt the impress of its touch and power.

He never commercialized his paper. Being editor and owner, he mapped out the paths it was to follow. He never deviated from his conceptions of what a Confederate magazine should be. He could never bear the idea of money-making in connection with his work. He begrudged even a few pages to advertisements and felt that this was taking from history a part of its just toll. He has refused thousands of dollars' profit because he could not in conscience give up so many pages to purposes other than preparing data for a really great history of the Southern armies.

When the shadows of death crossed his vision, he made preparations to continue for the benefit of the United Confederate Veterans this great periodical. The life of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN is thus assured.

He looked with sharpest grief at the contingency of the CONFEDERATE VETERAN's dying before the last Confederate soldier was summoned, and nothing can be more beautiful or pathetic than this last tribute to his people and his comrades.

NO SUCH REKIMBT!

GEN. ALEXANDER HAYS AT GETTYSBURG.

"Gen. Alexander Hays at the Battle of Gettysburg" is the title of a small book published at the time of the Gettysburg reunion for distribution among the survivors of both sides who participated in that eventful battle. A second edition having been printed, copies will be mailed free to any address by the General's son, Gilbert A. Hays, 307 Fourth Avenue, Pittsburgh, Pa.

CENTRAL ACADEMY MILITARY BAND.

This band of forty members is made up of sons and daughters, grandsons and granddaughters, nephews and nieces of veterans who have been chosen as official musicians to the J. E. B. Stuart Camp, U. C. V., of Stuart, Va. The band was sent to the reunion at Macon, Ga., where twenty concerts were played, and the members received much consideration and numerous kindly attentions.

These young people also headed the Johns Hopkins delegation in the Wilson inaugural parade in Washington last spring, receiving enthusiastic greetings from the entire presidential party for their beautiful rendition of "Dixie" while passing the reviewing stand. This recognition was very sweet to the boys and girls from Virginia's mountains, who, without a scratch of music, were playing with might and main this touching epic song of the Southern home, the war cry of the sixties, now one of the anthems of the free.

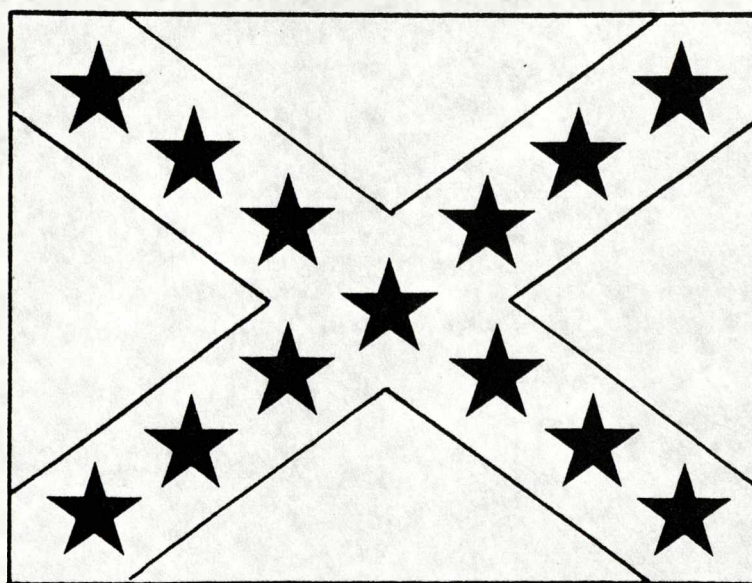

The Musical Times, a journal of interdenominational circulation, recently said: "These players have aroused much enthusiasm and have been called a 'bagpipe whirlwind,' a 'human pipe organ,' a 'mountain of music, full of fountains of song.' All the members are mountain-born, with all the romance of the great hills in their exuberant natures. Their music thrills with the weird, shrill clang and mocking sweetness of the mighty peaks and picturesque vales of their early surroundings, yet with the snappy grace of military movement, the tuneful transport and merry, mellow charm of dearest home life, mingled with the stirring elements of society's hopes for the joys and activities of mankind, realizing the pleasures and perfectly wholesome and unalloyed delightfulness of well-seasoned rest, recreation, and entertainment. They have earned much commendation from both their critics and their friends."

The leader of this band is President and Head Music Master of Central Military Academy. He has played in sixteen States, is Drillmaster, Scoutmaster, and a Past Captain of S. of V. The band is composed of students in this institution who are glad to do anything in their power for either the pleasure or honor of the old soldier.
